Brecht is perhaps the most influential German dramatist and poet of the twentieth century. He was born in [[Augsburg]] in [[Bavaria]]. He studied as a medical student and worked briefly as an orderly in a hospital, in [[Munich]], during [[World War I]]. Following the war he moved to [[Berlin]] where an influential critic, [[Herbert Ihering]], brought him to the attention of a public longing for modern theater. Already in Munich his first two plays, "Baal" and "Drums in the Night", had been performed and he got to know [[Erich Engel]], a director who worked with him off and on for the rest of his life. In Berlin, "In the Jungle of the Cities" starring [[Fritz Kortner]] and directed by Engel became his first success.
